Monira Foundation is pleased to announce Michael Heizer: HOLLYWOOD 24, a set of unique silkscreens to be shown at Mana Contemporary Chicago. Curated by the foundation’s Director, Ysabel Pinyol Blasi and Curatorial Director of the Ayn Foundation and artist, Tad Wiley. The presentation is the result of collaborative efforts between Mana Contemporary Chicago, Monira Foundation, and the Ayn Foundation.

Known for his monumental earthworks and sculptures in the California and Nevada deserts, Heizer pushes the boundaries of scale and perception. His works displace earth through the digging of trenches and creating “negative” lines in the ground, disrupt cliffs, and alter the way his audience interacts with them due to their scale and remote location. Beyond the earthworks, Heizer avidly integrated paintings and works on paper into his practice since his time in New York City. These works are at times minimal and geometric using only one color against the unprimed canvas, or more recently, free-form in shape, wildly colorful and energetic. Hollywood 24 is the outright product of Heizer’s imagination, albeit with the same deeply human and active hand he employed in his earthworks; Heizer scrapes, drips, wipes, pours, and draws on his screen prints. Functioning as a language known only to Heizer, the modern glyphs contain moments of anchoring to contain their chaos—Heizer’s use of repetition and hand-drawn lines corral the uncontained. In 1975, Heizer began screen printing at Gemini G.E.L in Los Angeles, California, where the Hollywood 24 series originated. Rather than creating multiples of one image, the works in the Hollywood 24 series all are unique silkscreen forms. Heizer would continue making unique prints with Gemini master printer Ken Tyler after Tyler left Gemini and moved to Bedford, New York.

On view for one year, the presentation is curated with the support of the Ayn Foundation. Concurrently, the Ayn Foundation has curated a series of long term presentations featuring prominent American Artists on view at Mana Contemporary, NJ, including; Andy Warhol, Arnulf Rainer, Dan Flavin, John Chamberlain, Rammellzee, and Fred Sandbeck, with support of the Monira Foundation. Additional programming will be announced upon finalization with both the Ayn Foundation and Mana Contemporary, Chicago.
